DC Health and the Department of Forensic Sciences are working with health care providers in DC to conduct a citywide sero-prevalence survey to understand the rates of exposure to COVID-19 in the District of Columbia.

The survey will focus on individuals with a high risk of exposure, including health care workers, first responders, essential workers, and individuals living in congregate settings.

Serology testing will help us determine the extent of infection and age-specific cumulative incidence, including the prevalence of asymptomatic or subclinical infections.
